The World's Geopolitical Landscape Is In Flux

The visit to Taiwan by US Speaker of the House Nancy Pelosi on August 2nd, and the reaction to that visit by the Chinese authorities, were widely reported upon by all media outlets. Pelosi had programmed her visit for April 2022, the first trip by a senior US lawmaker since House Speaker Newt Gingrich's visit in 1997; but her trip was cancelled due to Covid-19. Already at that time, the Chinese Ministry of Foreign Affairs said that the visit was a "malicious provocation" and that the People's Republic of China (PRC) would "take strong and resolute measures to thwart any interference by external forces".

In effect, the reaction by the Chinese authorities was resolute. On 1st August, the PRC announced a military exercise opposite Taiwan. A military build-up was also seen in cities and on beaches directly opposite Taiwan. The Chinese military has also continuously sent fighter aircraft and naval ships over the median line and into the Taiwanese Air Defence Identification Zone (ADIZ). These drills have also been planned for areas east of Taiwan. During Pelosi's stay, various Taiwanese government sites were hit by DDoS attacks, bringing down the Office of the President's website, the Ministry of Defence website as well as the website of the Taoyuan International Airport. Since the Russian invasion of Ukraine, many commentators said that China was keen to establish a new, privileged relationship with Putin's country because this invasion would legitimise, at some point, the Chinese invasion of Taiwan. But things are a bit more complicated than this.

First, already in July 2021, six months before Russia's invasion of Ukraine, we said that China would aim at taking back the "rebellious province" of Taiwan over the next 5 to 10 years, initially with a series of destabilising actions and provocations. The Chinese government will likely use a tactic not dissimilar from the one it adopted to take back control of Hong Kong.

Secondly, we said that China would not make such a move this year, as many had expected, simply because Chinese President Xi Jinping's energy is devoted to being re-elected as party leader for the third time (effectively paving the way to a lifelong tenure as Chinese leader, irrespective of the official title) during the upcoming 20th Congress of the Chinese Communist Party (CCP). A war with Taiwan, which may have unpredictable consequences, would likely cause more harm than good to Xi's hopes of re-election, paving the way for a victory of the opposing factions within the CCP, and in particular the faction led by Prime Minister Li Keqiang.

Third, and perhaps most importantly, when geopolitics is in flux, unexpected events may develop which make "mechanical inferences" less obvious than they would seem to be, prima facie. For example, recently Putin – the arch-enemy of the enlarging NATO alliance – and Erdogan, the President of Turkey, a long-time NATO member, decided to deepen the economic ties between their respective countries. Initially Erdogan established himself as the mediator between Russia and the West to free the grain stuck in Ukrainian ports (chiefly Odesa) besieged by the Russian army.

But during the meetings, which led to a partial unfreezing of those crops, badly needed to avoid famine in many African countries, Erdogan and Putin clearly found time to speak about their own respective interests. Although not many details were released of the intended increased cooperation, Western countries fear that Russia may find a way to circumvent the West's sanctions, and that Turkey may be less aligned with the rest of the alliance in its opposition to Russia.

This example shows how the war in Ukraine, which has polarised the world, has set in motion the entire geopolitical landscape, and that – in any case – a new world order is likely to emerge in coming years.

Looking Ahead

The Week Ahead: EZ And UK Headline And Core Inflation To Rise; EZ QoQ GDP To Advance; UK Retail Sales To Shrink

In the US, in July, IP is expected to recover by 0.3% m-o-m (p: -0.2%). In July, retail sales are seen decelerating to 0.1% m-o-m (p: 1.0%), whereas monthly retail sales ex-autos are likely to stagnate (p: 1.0%).

In the EZ, in Q2, according to second estimate, GDP is expected to rise by 0.7% q-o-q (p: 0.5%) and decelerate to 4.0% y-o-y (p: 5.4%). In July, inflation is likely to surge to 8.9% y-o-y (p: 8.6%) and cool off to 0.1% m-o-m (p: 0.8%). Core inflation is also likely to rise to 4.0% y-o-y (p: 3.7%).

In the UK, the unemployment rate is likely to stay unchanged at 3.8% in June. Headline and core inflation are expected to surge to 9.8% y-o-y (p: 9.4%) and 5.9% y-o-y (p: 5.8%). However, monthly inflation is seen decreasing 0.4% (p: 0.8%). July's retail sales are seen shrinking 3.3% y-o-y (p: -5.8%) and 0.2% m-o-m (p: -0.1%). In August, Consumer Confidence is expected to contract by -42 (p: -41).

The Quarter Ahead: FBI Executed A Search Warrant At Trump's House; Musk Sold Twitter Shares; Gas Prices Fell

Trump's Florida home was searched by the FBI. The search is reportedly connected to an investigation looking into White House records from the White House that Trump took with him. In January 2022, the National Archives and Records Administration discovered that Trump removed 15 boxes of White House documents and retrieved those documents from Mar-a-Lago, personal residence of Trump in Florida. In April, the DOJ started an investigation at the request of the National Archives. In June, DOJ and FBI investigators met with Trump attorneys to enquire about the handling of classified material. The investigation escalated in August, when the FBI executed a search warrant at Mar-a-Lago. Trump invoked the Fifth Amendment.

Elon Musk sold $7 bn in Tesla stocks for Twitter Deal. As Musk said, he might use these funds to finance a potential deal in case he loses a legal battle with Twitter. Social Media Platform sued Musk to force him to complete the transaction worth $44 bn.

US gasoline prices fell below $4 per gallon for the first time since March. The gas prices decreased as oil prices keep falling amid fears over an upcoming recession.

Last Week's Review

Real Economy: In US Headline Inflation Cooled Off, Whereas Core Stayed Unchanged; UK QoQ GDP Shrank
